PORTSTEWART.

THE Town of Portstewart is situate on the sea shore, midway between Portrush and Coleraine. Historically or commercially it has no pretensions, and cannot lay claim to even a spectral ruin or weekly market. Notwithstanding, the long line of comfortable and substantial dwelling-houses, which afford a charming outlook to the sea, would put to shame those in centres of great commercial industry and progress. The village, it appears, takes its name from a Lieutenant Stewart, who was the first known owner of the estate on which it stands. It is recorded that four little sod cottages, with their gables to the sea, were built by this gentleman, and these formed the commencement of what at present is one of the most charming, salubrious, and popular of Northern health resorts. The first tenants of the cottages, it is said, were four fishermen, whom Mr. Stewart brought with him from Innishowen, and furnished with a boat and lines to enable them to
