POYNTZPASS.

POYNTZPASS is situated eight miles north of Newry and four miles from Tandragee. It occupies a position on the borders of Armagh and Down, a small part of the town being in the latter county. It is a station on the Great Northern Railway, and there are quays on the canal, where lighters discharge coal brought from Newry. There is a good cattle fair on the first Saturday in each month, for the accommodation of buyers, at which the railway company have lately made several improvements, which greatly facilitate the en- railing of beasts. A market is held every Friday for fowl, butter, and eggs. Poyntzpass was anciently called Fenwick Pass, and was one of the four "passes" across the morasses, which at all other places were impassable in the valley between Newry and Gilford, through which now runs side by side the Newry Canal and the Great Northern Railway. Each of these "passes" was formerly protected by a castle, the remains of which have been long since removed. A short distance to the east of Poyntzpass are portions of remarkable earthworks known as the "Glen of the Black Pig" or the "Danes' Cart," but which may more correctly be termed the Great Wall of Ulidia or Ulster, which was formed in A.D. 352 by the Ulidians or Ulstermen after their defeat and the destruction of the palace of their kings at Emmaniam or Navan, near the city of Armagh, by the Three Collas. This "wall" can be traced from Lisnagade on the north of Searva to Meigh, near Jonesborough, and is a most remarkable erection. The Parish Church is a neat, modern building, which was enlarged and improved in 1893. It stands on a gentle elevation at the south end of the town. The present rector of the parish is Rev. W. F. Johnson, M.A.
